CARNEGIE SCIENCE CENTER SUMMER CAMPS PROVIDES GREAT OPTIONS FOR PARENTS

NEW PROGRAMS, ONLINE REGISTRATION AVAILABLE FOR 2018

PITTSBURGH, February 12, 2018 — The summer may be months away, but most parents are already thinking about ways to ensure that their child's summer is fun, active, and enriching. Carnegie Science Center summer camp registration is now open, and reservations are being accepted for dozens of programs for children ages 4 and up.

Campers explore the science of video games, discover the wide world of robotics, and explore the amazing biology of Pittsburgh. Little Einsteins will love specifically programmed half-day adventures, and older kids will enjoy full-day science experiences.

The NEW PPG Science Pavilion Learning Labs have opened a whole new world of opportunities for new camp offerings. Along with Kennywood Camp and Explore Pittsburgh, there are 25 new themes to choose from that will keep kids active all summer long! Campers can dive deep into digital storytelling, the environment, space robots, scientific mysteries, and more. Some camps will be held inside the new PPG Science Pavilion.

In addition to the new themes, Two-Day Scout Mini-Camps will provide troops with the ability to carry out authentic science experiments. Boy Scouts will venture out into the field to conduct water sampling, and Girl Scouts will experience hands-on activities with robotics and computer programming. Scouts attending either camp are eligible to receive badges.
